In collecting the genealogies of large families the labor of correspondence is greater than most persons would suppose. Those who receive a written communication are desired kindly to fill up this blank form to the best of their knowledge and return it without delay. The addresses of other members of the family are especially desired. In addition to the record of this particular family, each recipient is desired to forward (on a separate sheet) copies of such older records as may be in his or her possession with the accepted traditions or other information of their ancestors, and to report what old Bibles (with dates when printed), deeds, marriage certificates, old silver, clocks, or other heirlooms they may possess; also, printed obituaries, newspaper notices, or accounts of family celebrations. It would be interesting to know the location, and who are the present owners, of ancestral homesteads. The ancestry of those who marry into the family now being traced should be given as far back as known. EVERY QUESTION BELOW IS IMPORTANT.

Collecting the genealogies of large families the labor of correspondence is greater than most persons would suppose. Those who do not receive written communication are desired kindly to fill up this blank form to the best of their knowledge, and return it without delay. The names of other members of the family are especially desired. In addition to the record of this particular family, each recipient is requested to send (on a separate sheet) copies of such older records as may be in his or her possession, with the accepted traditions or other information of ancestors, and to report what old Bibles (with dates when printed), deeds, marriage certificates, old silver, clocks, or other heirlooms they may possess, also, printed obituaries, newspaper notices, or accounts of family celebrations. It would be interesting to know the location, and who are the present owners, of ancestral homesteads. The ancestry of those who marry into the family now being traced should be given as far back as possible. EVERY QUESTION BELOW IS IMPORTANT.
